STOP

Traffic-lights: beware!

In English, we know who is doing something, and to whom they are doing it, by the order of words.

In Latin, it is the ending on the noun that tells us who is doing something and to whom:

E.g. puella agricolam amat; and agricolam puella amat

both mean the same thing: the girl loves the farmer.

1. Copy the following sentences. Mark N for subject, V for verb and A for object and then translate them into English.

(a) ^N agricolae ^A īnsulam ^V habitant → The farmers inhabit the island.

(b) ^A deam ^N puella ^V amat → The girl loves the goddess.

(c) ^N ancillae ^A poētam ^V vocant → The maid-servants are calling the poet.

1. Copy the following sentences. Mark N for subject, V for verb and A for object and then translate them into English.

(d) ^A ^N ^V
fīliam fēmina spectat → The woman watches the daughter.

(e) ^N ^A ^V
puellae rēgīnam laudant → The girls praise the queen.

(f) ^A ^N ^V
rēgīnam puellae laudant → The girls praise the queen.
